Maj. William E. Dyess states that Lt. Col. Biggs, Lt. Col. Breitung and Lt. Gilbert were recaptured after attempting to escape and were tortured and then shot.

(5-45) 14

SECRET

Maj. Wm. E. Dyess states that on the march from Bataan to O'Donnel prisoners were searched and beheaded if found with Jap money in their possession. They were marched with no food and little water for several days and continually beaten by Jap troops. Prisoners too weak to continue were killed if they fell out of line. An American Colonel attempting to help some soldiers who had fallen out was severely hosed. Another who asked for food for the prisoners was struck on the head with a can of salmon. In six days Maj. Dyess marched 135 Kms and was fed one mess kit of rice.

(S-45)43

Major William E. Dyess states that at Cabanatuan the principal item of diet was rice. In one instance, three chickens were issued for 500 men and in another, 50 eggs for 500 men. The death rate at Cabanatuan ran around 20 daily. Malaria, wet beri-beri, scurby, blindness took a heavy toll, with diarrhoea, dysentery, yellow jaundice and dengue fever. The Red Cross was eventually let in to give the Americans some medical supplies but they were withheld for some time. The principal cause of death was malnutrition.

(5-45) 40

SECRET

Major Wm. E. Dyess states that the Jap camp commander at O'Donnell made a speech to the effect that the Ps/W were not to expect treatment as POW but as captives as they were enemies of Japan. The conditions under which American prisoners lived was well known to high Papanese military and civilian authorities, who made frequent visits.
